

The No-Call list has been a huge improvement in our lives. We have never ever purchased anything, became a customer of the company represented by the caller in all the years we received these calls. In fact, we would be less inclined to purchase anything from a telemarketed pitch than to buy. I think the callers pressure many seniors, uninformed individuals with 'too good to be true' tactics. We don't want the 'No Call' list ended and would be likely to just stop answering the phone from these callers via using calling ID. Many people won't pay for this or can't and so would continue to be annoyed by privacy invasion into their homes by unwanted solicitation.